

weapon on a postage stamp

Compact and of high performance, The Westland Scout 5/6 seat general purpose helicopter, now in quantity production for the Army, can operate from an area as little as forty feet square.

As a weapon it can be used to strike at enemy units over a wide area and its compactness and manoeuvrability make it an ideal machine for jungle warfare.

It can be used as a light transport helicopter, casualty evacuation at altitude or for armed reconnaissance. A specially designed skid undercarriage allows the machine to land in all kinds of terrain and enables it to deliver weapons and equipment to isolated units anywhere.

Fitted with a Bristol Siddeley Nimbus free shaft gas turbine, the Scout is today's versatile light helicopter, capable of carrying out a very wide range of tasks and of landing virtually . . . on a postage stamp.
